 mary schools; (2) the grading of the primary schools by years instead of by half-years, thus making eight grades instead of the former system of twelve grades; (3) the arrangement for teachers to hold their classes for a year instead of a half year; and (4) the providing for annual instead of semi-annual examinations and promotions. 24. The organization, in 1897, of the Department of Compulsory Attendance by which two censuses of school children of the city have been taken, thousands of truants have been placed in school, two special schools established for the education of children unsuited to the regular schools, and foundations laid for the still more efficient enforcement of the law. 25. The adoption, in 1892-3, of new forms for both monthly and annual reports by which are obtained detailed and accurate statistics concerning school enrollment and attendance, and the...
