The preservation of this book up to the time of the invention of printing, which forever secured it to posterity, reads like a romance. The world is plainly indebted for it solely to the labors of the pious monks of the Benedictine Monastery of Montecassino; the parent monastery, founded by Saint Benedict himself in the year 529. Situated about half way, on the railroad and the main highway, between Rome and Naples, and not far to the eastward of a line drawn from one to the other, on top of a mountain some fifteen hundred feet high, rising with a very steep pitch directly up from the valley carrying the highway, this monastery forms a marked object in the landscape. In 1866 this monastery became state property, but the original chapter of Benedictine monks still lives there, and they carry on their literary work as of yore, only that they now use the printing-press, the lithographer s stone, yea, even the camera and modern photographic reproduction processes, instead of the pen. They also keep a large school for boys, so that over three hundred people inhabit the mountain top. The old and the new are represented by such extremes in a place like this, that the contrast...
