At length she recollected that in her eagerness to examine the twenty pound note she had la;(received, she cast the letter enclosing it aside, and forgotten to look for it again. She at once, therefore, inferred that this was the one found by her brother-in law; and she was right, for having to leave the house so soon, she lost her usual caution, and left the envelope where it had been thrown. The housemaid found it on the following morning, and considering it to be merely a piece of waste-paper, carried it to another apartment in which she was about to light a fire. But the intentions of house-maids are as liable to overthrows as those of kings and ministers of stale; our damsel of the...
